“Showing my BU pride goes beyond performing well on the football field; it’s about doing my best at school and finding ways to give back to the local community.”

David Haddrall, Kingston ON
5th year Biology & Health Sciences student

A star receiver for the Gaiter’s Football Team, David not only excels academically, but also has an important impact on the Lennoxville community through his volunteer work.

Giving to the Annual Fund provides our students with the financial support they need to focus on experiences and opportunities that shape them into well rounded, contributing young adults.

Charitable donations touch every aspect of campus life. They make scholarships and bursaries for our students possible. They provide support for experiential learning programs, exchanges and internships. They enrich our Library, academic departments, athletic programs, extracurricular activities and more.

All gifts made to the Bishop’s Annual Fund, regardless of their size, have a direct impact on the education and experience of today’s students, and help address their specific needs.

Our year ends June 30, 2013. To make your gift, visit www.ubishops.ca/gift or contact Liz Mazurek ’08: 866-822-5210; emazurek@ubishops.ca

Bon Voyage After eight years, our Chancellor sails away from Bishop’s

I first met Scott Griffin OC, ’60, DCL ’02 in 2008 in the gardens at the Ritz in Montreal where we got together for breakfast as part of a process of mutual inspection about the possibility of me accepting to be Principal of Bishop’s. A most charming individual, Scott presented his belief in Bishop’s passionately and persuasively. He gave me a totally positive—and sincere—introduction to our University.

Having since become well acquainted with him, I think of Scott as thoughtful, optimistic, courageous and adventurous. He defines joie de vivre. He has also displayed a high degree of loyalty, without reservation, to individuals and to our University.

As Chancellor, Scott provided candid and good advice, offered sound judgment and wisdom, supported me as Principal yet ultimately deferred to my decisions, knowing that I own the responsibilities.

Piloting a vintage single engine Cessna captures the sang-froid of this man. Scott would depart from the Toronto Island Airport in the morning, fly his plane to land on a narrow strip in a farmer’s field near our campus, walk over to McGreer to participate in meetings, then fly home. All in a day’s work.

Of course that excursion seems tame compared to flying his little plane single-handedly across the Atlantic, wearing a survival suit and sitting on bladders of fuel, to spend two years ferrying medical relief teams around Kenya (recounted in his book, My Heart is Africa: A Flying Adventure).

Scott takes on plenty of challenges but remains understated about his accomplishments—and they are many.

Recently named an Officer of the Order of Canada, Scott indefatigably champions poetry and literature in Canada. In 2001, for example, he established the Griffin Poetry Prize—the world’s largest prize for a first edition single collection of poetry written in, or translated into, English from any country in the world—to spark the public’s imagination and raise awareness of the crucial role poetry plays in our cultural life.

In 2002 he rescued House of Anansi Press, a publishing company that has grown from five employees and three books published in 2003 to 26 employees and the publication of about 100 titles in 2011. Most recently Scott introduced Poetry In Voice/Les voix de la poésie, a national poetry recitation contest for high-school students in Canada, to promote the art of poetry in both the classroom and the community.

Scott will say he likes to help secure leaders and then let them perform their jobs. Witness Bishop’s and Anansi.

In stepping aside as Chancellor, Scott, like Tennyson’s Ulysses, “cannot rest from travel.” On behalf of the Bishop’s community I say bon voyage to Scott, quite literally as I know he plans to sail his own boat around Cape Horn.

Michael Goldbloom

“Scott Griffin—a renaissance man—exemplifies the Bishop’s education and served as a good role model for our students in whom we aim to instill familiarity with a broad range of disciplines and interests. The right person at the right time, he brought national recognition and stature to our institution. As a highly regarded Canadian, he reflects our University well.

The Bishop’s community thanks Scott for his outstanding contributions during his years as Chancellor.”

Squee Gordon ’60, DCL ’04, Chair of the Board of Governors

“Poetry In Voice/Les voix de la poésie benefitted from Scott’s passion for the arts and his great generosity. Each year he contributed to our operating budget, allowing us to buy new seating for our Turner Studio Theatre, to offer our students enriching workshops with visiting professional theatre artists and to mount an original musical, Cinderella, which attracted over 2000 members of the Bishop’s community to Centennial Theatre.

We are indebted to Scott for his unwavering support.”

Meet Brian M. Levitt, our 19th Chancellor

Scott Griffin OC, ’60, DCL ’02

the role of Chancellor opened a window for me, and getting to know the world of academe from a different perspective has proven to be engaging and instructive. And a true privilege.

To some extent you tailor the position to your talents and interests. As part of a team, I helped deal with four key issues during my tenure:

• changing the Principal of Bishop’s,
• changing the governance structure,
• changing the atmosphere on campus from somewhat confrontational to collegial, and
• bringing recognition to unfortunate financial realities.

I’ve relished my interaction with students and their professors—all of whom are dedicated, enthusiastic and talented. And I feel I contributed in a small way to leaving the University in good shape for my successor.

I plan to spend the next 8-9 months preparing my sailboat and then navigate across the Atlantic, through the Panama Canal and around the Horn. I’m also working on another book, a rather ambitious historical novel about the Arctic in the mid 1800s.

The fact is, I feel younger now than when I began eight years ago as Chancellor.

Scott Griffin OC, ’60, DCL ’02

Squee Gordon ’60, DCL ’04, Chair of the Board of Governors, announced that the Board approved the unanimous recommendation of the Bishop’s Council to appoint Brian M. Levitt Chancellor of Bishop’s University for a five-year term beginning on June 1, 2013.

Mr. Levitt is Co-Chair of Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt LLP, working out of its Montreal office, and, since 2011, has served as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Toronto-Dominion Bank.

He earned a BSc in Civil Engineering and an LLB from the University of Toronto. In 1976, after two years working as a lawyer for the federal government’s Anti-Inflation Board, he joined Osler’s Toronto office. He was named partner in 1979. From 1991 to 2000, he served as President and then CEO of Canadian consumer products and services company Imasco Limited.

An active participant in community organizations and public life, Mr. Levitt currently serves as Chair of the Board of Trustees of the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts and as Chair of the Canadian Judicial Compensation and Benefits Council.

Mr. Levitt says he accepted the appointment because: “I have known Michael Goldbloom for a long time and have every confidence in him as a leader. As well, I believe in the value of the ‘Bishop’s model’, a liberal education delivered in a small, residential, primarily undergraduate university. Increasingly students need a broad-based education to prepare them for life—both personal and professional.”

He also says, “Every leader needs a sounding board, and I can function in that capacity to the Principal.”

Mr. Levitt looks forward to becoming part of the Bishop’s community.
Fulfilling a desire for story-telling

Chris Edwards ’95 on his career with TSN

Every event presents new challenges, giving me a chance to tell a new story from a blank canvas. I also relish the pressure of my job. You make the call, you make it quick, and you make it with authority. The viewer at home sees and hears a collaboration by an excellent team, but the buck stops at the producer.”

Chris recalls, “Going to Bishop’s was the best decision to that point in my life.” Although he only visited the campus once from Edmonton, he knew about the university from his parents: Allison (Perry) ’56 and Glyn ’57 Edwards. Recruited for football and drawn to Bishop’s intimate community, Chris played for the Gaiters like his father before him. He also made his first foray into the media world as Sports Editor of The Campus, finding “an excitement and desire for story-telling that lives in me to this day.”

Chris jokes, “My career marries the two things I did best growing up: playing sports and watching TV.” He started at The Sports Network (TSN) in 1996 as a two-week intern for the network’s NHL playoffs coverage. “My duty was doing whatever the late, great coach Pat Burns asked. Pat and I formed an immediate bond as we shared ties to the Eastern Townships: he was a police officer in Sherbrooke and knew all about Bishop’s, especially The Lion and its customers!” Chris must have performed his duty well because those two weeks have turned into 17 years and counting at TSN.

In 2005 Chris was working as the Associate Producer/Director for a CFL game in Edmonton when he first sat in the producer’s chair and took the reins at a live event, the annual Labour Day rematch between the Eskimos and the Stampeders. The game’s producer “asked if I wanted to replace him in the second half; I eagerly jumped at the challenge. It turned out to be a thrilling second half of football, with the crowd in a frenzy and the Eskimos winning on a last second touchdown. After I counted us off the air, I sat back, high from the rush of it all, and thought to myself: this is it. This is what I want to do.”

By 2007 Chris gained a promotion to his current role as Live Event Producer, orchestrating TV broadcasts of NHL, CFL, CIS and IIHF games as well as the Canada Games and Olympics. He goes to the locales of about 70 events a year where he leads a crew of 50 production and technical staff, guiding them from start to finish of the broadcast by making decisions on the show’s timing, storylines, replay sequences, graphic information and commercial breaks, to best translate the game’s stories onto the screen for viewers at home.

As Chris explains, “Every event presents new challenges, giving me a chance to tell a new story from a blank canvas. I also relish the pressure of my job. I make most decisions on the spot—live TV offers no second take. You make the call, you make it quick, and you make it with authority. The viewer at home sees and hears a collaboration by an excellent team, but the buck stops at the producer.”

Although Chris thoroughly enjoys working on the NHL playoffs and being part of TSN’s great CFL telecast team, he derives most satisfaction from amateur events. Indeed, he cites his notable achievements to date as producing the coverage of curling at the 2010 Vancouver Winter Olympics (which culminated in two gold medals) and of the Vanier Cup. “As a member of the Gaiters family, I have a special place in my heart for university football and want to help amateur football evolve by raising its level of exposure.”

His production of the 2011 Vanier Cup turned out to be the most watched Vanier Cup ever, resulting in a nomination for a Canadian Screen Award for Best Live Sporting Event.

Look for Chris to return to the Eastern Townships this summer, the place where his media story began, as he will be involved in aspects of the Canada Summer Games for TSN, likely producing broadcasts of the Opening and Closing Ceremonies. ■
Passionate about the cause of physical activity
Kelly Murumets ‘85 aims for a seismic shift in our attitude and behaviour

Kelly epitomizes action. From the moment she springs out of bed and hastens to work in the morning, either her body or her mind revels in activity. A skier, scuba diver, hiker, walker, and fitness buff, Kelly has also won accolades for her professional accomplishments.

Kelly was named to the 2007, 2009, 2011 and 2012 CAAWS Most Influential Women in Sport and Physical Activity list and to Canada’s Most Powerful Women: Top 100 in 2009. She was identified as one of the Ten Most Influential Canadian Figures in Sport in 2012. Kelly received the Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee Medal in 2013.

When the board of ParticipACTION decided in 2007 to revitalize the iconic brand (introduced in 1971 but dormant since 2001), an executive search firm found the ideal candidate to lead the way in Kelly—who seized “an opportunity to change the world.”

The organization’s message to Canadians may be simple, Let’s get moving, but Kelly claims we require “a seismic shift” in attitude and behaviour. She quotes studies that report only 7% of youth meet the recommended guidelines of 60 minutes of physical activity per day, while a mere 15% of adults pursue the minimum 150 minutes per week.

“We aim to create a nation where daily physical activity is not only a priority, but also second nature—as natural as child’s play,” says Kelly.

ParticipACTION must be focused to touch 34 million Canadians. “Moms stand as key decision makers, so if we educate them about the benefits of physical activity, they will inspire their children, their husbands and other family members to move more.”

The organization launched a campaign, Bring Back Play, which encourages parents to increase their children’s movement by reviving the fun games and unstructured play that used to typify every childhood.

While ParticipACTION invests principally in youth, Kelly continues to address other audiences through compelling programs and communications. One such example is Sports Day in Canada, a national celebration of sport, from grassroots to high-performance levels, in communities across the country, now in its third year.

Another is Sneak It In Week aimed at people in the workforce. This campaign declares, “Lose the loafers. Give the heels a break. Wear sneakers to work for a week in April and you’ll see how easy it can be to fit in more activity.”

Asked about challenges in her job, Kelly says, “Trying to establish a movement of physical activity in our country takes time, and I’m not the most patient of people. However, I’m optimistic the tide is starting to turn.” She notes, for instance, that federal and provincial/territorial ministers responsible for recreation and sport have deemed physical activity a priority.

She also acknowledges the perennial challenge of funding. She spends considerable time first, in convincing everyone in both public and private sectors of the need to invest in educating citizens about the imperative of increased activity and next, in giving anyone who invests in ParticipACTION a good return on investment.

Kelly identifies three reasons she enjoys her job: “I feel passionate about the cause. Quite simply, physical activity is in my DNA. I love the people who work with me, not only the staff of 20 talented individuals I hired but also everyone who functions in our field. And I relish the many challenges that help me to evolve as a better leader and a better person every day.”

Through physical activity, Kelly maintains “you’ll be rewarded with a longer, happier, more fulfilling life.”
Michele feels unbelievably lucky to have found a way to be involved professionally in her “life’s obsession,” while also representing her country. As the Executive Director at Canada Basketball (CB), her main responsibilities “are to support Canadian basketball however I can, working with the CB staff, athletes, coaches and officials as well as with our basketball partners—the CIS, CCAA and provincial/territorial sport organizations—to develop basketball at home and achieve success on the international stage.” Michele also serves on the FIBA Americas Central Board.

Her road to these positions began in her playing days. “I visited Bishop’s once with my basketball team in my final year of high school and fell in love with the small school and town.” It helped that her friend, the legendary Lady Gaiter Lynn Polson ’84, another native of the Niagara region, preceded her in choosing to play basketball at Bishop’s.

After graduating from Bishop’s, Michele remained connected with basketball in other roles—as a coach, a referee and an administrator. In 1994 Canada hosted the FIBA World Championship for men. “That was my first summer with CB,” recalls Michele, “and I got hooked. I’ve been with CB for almost ten years. I left twice but kept returning to the organization.”

This year Canada Basketball celebrates 90 years since its origins in 1923 in Port Arthur ON as the governing body of the sport in our country. Among other programs CB introduced a Hall of Fame in 1978; Debbie Huband ’79 was inducted as a player in 1994.

The breadth of Michele’s basketball experience has allowed her to gain “a clarity of vision about how we might move the game in Canada along a path to higher performance.” Michele recognizes that “high performing athletes need to compete against the best, and CIS schools don’t always offer that opportunity. Only one player from CIS basketball plays on our women’s national team, which is different from my era when most of the national team derived from the CIS.”

“For basketball to advance in Canada, we must grow the sport at the club level.” To this end CB tries to support provincial clubs by educating and training coaches, providing template policies and producing documentation on how to build successful teams.

Another need: “We must put more money into the system. Amateur sport cannot continue to depend on government funding; rather, we must build strategic relationships with private industry and non-traditional partners such as China, where basketball is the number one sport.”

When our Canadian teams play in China, “we’d like to secure a Canadian jersey sponsor, a company that conducts business in China and would benefit from their brand being seen by the huge number of fans who watch the game on Chinese TV.”

While Michele continues to seek ways of improving Canadian basketball, she feels proud that “Canada is considered one of the top competitors in international basketball.”

In the last few years, the U17 girls won the bronze medal at the World Championships and the boys placed fifth. The Canadian women’s team not only qualified for the 2012 Olympics in London (the first time since 2000 in Sydney) but also finished in the top eight, after defeating a strong Brazil team to earn a quarter final berth.

Such achievements reflect a team effort on and off the court, including contributions of Denise Dignard ’82 who works as the Director of Women’s High Performance at CB.

Michele looks forward to the Canada Summer Games in Sherbrooke because they “give high performance athletes a chance to compete in a large, multi-sport event where they learn how to contend with distractions and gain a well-rounded experience.”

Love into livelihood  Surprising career results for Jean-François Roy ‘04

In his own words, Jean-François “always wanted to earn a living in sports.” After seeing a few Bishop’s football games in the late ‘90s and being very impressed with some of the players, he chose to play for the Gaiters and twice earned lineman of the year honours. He played well enough to make the roster of the CFL’s Ottawa Renegades in 2004-05.

While his career as a professional athlete was short-lived, Jean-François learned a great deal from his Ottawa experience. He took notice of the whole Renegades’ operation and began to see there might be other ways of earning a living in sports than as a football player or coach. When Catherine Charbonneau ’03, his girlfriend and a Lady Gaiter herself, told him about an opportunity to add to his educational credentials and improve his chances for employment, he decided to get a graduate certificate in Sports Business Management at Algonquin College (2007-08).

“It turned out to be a great program led by sports professionals, including Bishop’s athletic Wall of Distinction inductee Sue Hylland ‘81.”

Jean-François had been looking to get involved with a national sports organization for a while when his chance came in the summer of 2010. Showing the same flexibility that allowed him to switch from the defensive to the offensive line with the Gaiters, the former football player began to work for Athletics Canada (AC), the national governing body for track and field.

Now the Talent Development Coordinator at AC, Jean-François manages all the programs and national teams for athletes aged 16 to 24 years old. “Our main program for this age group is the Olympic Development Program that aims to identify, support, and promote talented Canadian track and field athletes, providing them with a development pathway to achieve podium and top eight performances at major international meets.”

Jean-François is also the lead person for the National Athletics High Performance Centres athlete identification and recruiting efforts across Canada, a role which requires him to graph performance curves and monitor athletes’ progression over periods of time. Such performance curves provide the coaches with the necessary data to create training and competition plans that will help athletes to peak at the desired time.

From June to late August every year, Jean-François manages two or three national teams of 50 members, working on everything from the selection and registration of athletes and staff to arrangements for travel (both domestic and international), accommodation and food. Organizing the teams is challenging enough but meeting tight deadlines adds to the difficulties of his job, especially when competitions are scheduled close together in time.

This summer, for instance, the Pan-American Junior Championships will take place just two weeks after the World Youth Championships. While the championships will take place on different continents, all the planning needs to be done at the same time. As the manager, he travels with at least one of the teams every summer, a responsibility that has already taken him to such interesting places as the Isle of Man for the 2011 Commonwealth Youth Games, Barcelona, Spain for the 2012 IAAF World Junior Championships and Donetsk, Ukraine for the 2013 IAAF World Youth Championships.

During the winter, Jean-François organizes up to two warm weather camps that allow athletes to train outdoors in Arizona, California, Florida or the Caribbean. Again he manages the logistics of travel and has a say in the selection process.

“Earning the trust of the national coaches I work with is special to me. These men and women have been to many Olympic Games and World Championships, and they now respect my opinion and my ability to contribute to the development of our young athletes.”

Beginning as a football player, and ending up in the world of track and field, Jean-François exemplifies how a love of sports can lead to surprising results. He believes that “ultimately, I got my job at AC because of my wide-ranging coaching and volunteering experience in sports. If you think you want to work in the field of amateur sports, take advantage of the numerous opportunities to volunteer in the Canadian sports system.”

On your mark, get set... all systems a go as Bishop’s helps host the 2013 Canada Summer Games in Sherbrooke.

With its motto, “Unity through Sport,” the Canada Games began as a winter event in Quebec City in February 1967 and has been held every two years since in a different province or territory, alternating between Winter and Summer Games. Coincidentally, Tom Allen ’69, Chair of the Board and Executive Committee of the Sherbrooke Canada Games (August 2-17), participated in the 1967 Games, representing New Brunswick on its hockey team.

As Canada’s single, largest multi-sport competition, the Games have brought together more than 100,000 athletes over the years and played a central role in the promotion of sport and physical activity in our country. Athletes vary in age, depending on the sport, but most are under 23. In the Para- and Special Olympics the athletes must be under 30.

Each province and territory sends athletes to compete in some or all of the 20 sports. The Games emphasize achievement, perseverance, pleasure, and accountability—all in a spirit of friendship and community. They not only help develop Canada’s best athletes, serving as a springboard for their careers, but also highlight the richness and diversity of our culture.

In 2009 Sherbrooke won the bid for the Games partly because the Bishop’s campus offers an ideal site for an athletes’ village. Tom explains that, “As the Host Society, we assume responsibility to provide every service: healthcare, security, transportation, accommodation, sporting venues and so on.”

An infrastructure line of the Games budget provides “fit-out money” of $19.4 million. Only three new facilities—a tennis centre in Rock Forest and a 25 metre pool plus a soccer pitch at l’Université de Sherbrooke—had to be built. As the site for basketball, Bishop’s received money to renovate the Mitchell gymnasium. Sixteen other venues, such as one for baseball in Coatitook and for rowing in Magog, were renewed.

To get ready for the athletes and officials, the Sherbrooke organizers bought stock... from Halifax which hosted the 2011 Winter Games: bunk beds, mattresses, computers, walkie-talkies and spectator barriers.

They also rented office space for 67 employees and 10 stagiaires and found two huge warehouses to store additional items such as golf balls, soccer balls and nets.

Promoting the big event began with the theme, Get in the Games; since February 2013 a new brand, Vivez—Live It, became the focal point of advertising.

“Two weeks before the start of the Games, organizers and staff will move to Bishop’s and set up a ‘command centre’ in the Champlain College building,” notes Tom. “During the two-week period of competition, the campus will become an Olympic-style Village and the hub of the Games.”

Bishop’s will be the headquarters for the 13 provinces and territories, the site of a Polyclinic, the main bus terminal, a social centre for the athletes, coaches and managers, and a venue for soccer and basketball.

Athletes will arrive on campus in two waves: the 2100 athletes competing in the first week will participate in the opening ceremonies, while the 2100 in the following week will be part of the closing ceremonies.

While the Games come with a budget of $50 million, the overall economic return to the region should be over $100 million. Eventually all supplies and equipment will be auctioned off and/or donated to local clubs and organizations.

The Games leave not only a legacy of new and improved facilities but also a trust fund of $1 million to be administered by Sherbrooke for the future growth of sporting excellence in the region.

Appointed Chair in 2010 of the Sherbrooke 2013 Canada Games, Tom declares the project “one of the best challenges I’ve undertaken.” He enjoys working with everyone involved in the organization and eagerly awaits the excitement of August when thousands of people will come to Sherbrooke.

Tom says, “The Games will promote tourism in our region, showcase our educational institutions and inspire young people to engage in sports and physical activity.”

Quebec’s unsung apple gets a boost

Distilling apples into award winning ice cider

Dr. Susan Reid (Business professor at Bishop’s since 2004) and her husband Charlie Crawford skied at Jay Peak since 1990, often driving past a beautiful property on the southern slopes of Pinnacle Mountain en route from their home in Montreal. They admired the spectacular view and, when a For Sale sign appeared in 1999, they decided to buy the estate with its charming farmhouse dating back to 1859. What started as a weekend retreat soon turned into a business preoccupation as the couple contemplated what to do with an apple orchard that covered a third of their 430 acres. Susan says, “We realized that simply selling apples would lead to bankruptcy since the market was flooded with non-local produce. We couldn’t bring ourselves to cut down the mature trees, yet apple orchards are labour intensive, requiring year-round maintenance.”

“We hired an orchard manager who lived in our farmhouse while it underwent restoration and renovation. Our real estate agent introduced us to a man experimenting with ice cider, and he agreed to work for us as a cider maker. We decided to test the viability of building an ice cider business.”

Next came a focus group in Montreal, involving influential people in the spirits industry (e.g. the head of the Opimian Society). “They loved the product and saw an opportunity for us. The poor unsung apple of Quebec needed a boost, and the whole project felt right.”

And so began the orchard and cidery known as Domaine Pinnacle, dedicated to producing the world’s best ice cider. Susan and Charlie sold 500 cases of 12 bottles in 2000 and had enough product in their second year to go global.

Meanwhile work on their house had proceeded far enough to allow the couple to move there with their two young children on a permanent basis in the summer of 2002. In the early years, a boutique for selling cider was located right in the middle of their house. Susan remembers, “This situation presented interesting moments, particularly at Thanksgiving, our busiest weekend of the year, when people lined up outside the door for their bottle of Thanksgiving cider and watched me in the kitchen stuffing a bird. I felt some customers wanted to offer pointers on how I should do it!”

Susan attributes the success of Domaine Pinnacle to a number of key decisions, beginning with good hiring choices. “We employed Fred Boucher early on, when he was young, because we recognized in him a thoroughbred sales person. He remains with us today.”

Her job at Bishop’s led to “an infusion of purple spirit into the cider culture” with two more recent hires. “Stefan Lemieux ’10 expressed an interest in working for us. Although I didn’t teach him, he participated on a winning NIBS team and was well regarded by his professors. Katie Wallace ’11 worked for me as a research assistant and now does a great job of marketing for us.”

The decision to form “strategic alliances” also proved beneficial. “We didn’t want to become a distributor,” explains Susan, “so we teamed up with an established one.” When she and Charlie went to VinExpo in Bordeaux they met Cyril Camus III, the fifth generation President of the 150-year-old Camus Cognac. He became a valuable partner for the global sales of Pinnacle ice cider and other products.

Susan and Charlie also had to define their consumer and try to vary the products to suit different tastes. For example, many women enjoy a light cider with a salad for a social lunch so Domaine Pinnacle introduced Verger Sud, with 11% instead of 12% alcohol content.
In the short time since Susan and Charlie sold their first bottles of ice cider, Pinnacle has taken its place among the finest producers, winning dozens of gold medals at prestigious international wine competitions. “We have the majority of the market share of ice cider sales in Quebec, selling 70% of our cider in this province, 10% in the rest of Canada and 20% internationally,” notes Susan. Domaine Pinnacle now sells 25,000 cases of ice cider a year, depending on the apple crop. Always keeping their eye on the big picture, Susan and Charlie launched new products such as Maple Cider, Maple Whiskey and Maple Cream, and opened a new still in March to produce their Ungava gin and vodka. They aim to increase their international presence with all lines. Not surprisingly they now have 25 full-time and several part-time employees.

In today’s connected world, Domaine Pinnacle cannot function without an online presence. The web not only facilitates market research and analysis but also helps determine supply and demand. Susan and Charlie know, for instance, the number of bottles of their products that are available at any SAQ outlet at any given time.

You can drive to their estate in the Eastern Townships to sample or purchase the products or to learn more about them visit www.domainepinnacle.com.

At an Interpretation Centre on the estate you can take a self-guided tour to find out about apples and apple growing.

You’ll also get a sense of how a family-owned business reached the pinnacle of success in just 13 years.

Characteristics of Domaine Pinnacle Ice Cider

> All natural, with no added sugar or alcohol.
> Made from six varieties of apples (not one or two), creating distinctiveness and complexity of flavor.
> Fermented at low temperatures for eight months (versus one to two months for some ice wines), developing maximum product complexity while providing exceptional stability.
> Suitable to be cellared for up to 20 years.
> Excellent to drink now, but will improve steadily with time in the bottle.

Student government turns 120

In March students celebrated the 120th anniversary of the establishment of their own student government.

The Students’ Representative Council (SRC) strives to improve student life—assisting the 50+ clubs on campus, volunteering in the local community, representing students on over 20 university committees, and running a convenience store and a pub.

To commemorate its milestone, the Council organized a series of events that culminated in seven former SRC Presidents returning to campus to partake in the festivities, share their experiences and meet current students.

SRC Presidents: Connor Quinn ’05, Mark Lawson ’09, Ray Jensen ’50, Paige Johnson ’10, Brad Leung ’10, Eric Bergeron ’99, Kim Huet (incoming), Adam Frost ’01, Adam Peabody

Musical memories

To mark his 25 years at Bishop’s, Dr. Andrew MacDonald (Music) and the Quatuor Pegasus played a selection of Andrew’s original compositions at a concert in Bandeen Hall. The oldest piece in the evening’s repertoire was “Hymenaeus, op. 38” from 1996; he composed the newest, “Snow Games”, this year.

The Right Honourable Michaëlle Jean, 25th Governor General of Canada (2005-10), addressed an audience of 300 students as part of the Donald Lecture Series. Jean spoke on her passions, from the importance of language to her work in the arts and development in Haiti.

She said life in Sherbrooke gives an “extraordinary chance” to learn and enjoy “the beauty and musicality of French,” suggesting that learning new languages can open new doors of opportunity.

Jean said her drive to Sherbrooke reminded her of moving to nearby Thetford Mines in her childhood. “We arrived with nothing but a belief that we could reinvent ourselves in Canada.”

As Governor General, Jean saw grassroots movements and community groups as a large part of her touring agenda. Pursuing “people-to-people diplomacy,” she also went on visits abroad, including to her birth country of Haiti following its earthquake in 2010. Now, the former GG returns to Haiti every two months as a UNESCO special envoy to the country.

Waking up to movements

Brought to campus by the School of Education, journalist, feminist and political activist Judy Rebick recalled the feminist movement in the 1960s and her time as president of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

More recently Rebick has focussed on the protests sweeping North America and beyond. Citing movements such as Occupy and Idle No More, she praised their exciting nature, reminiscent of the 60s and 70s.

She also spoke on the Quebec student strikes, explaining that they shared a commonality with Occupy in active decision-making through general assemblies. Rebick paid homage to both movements’ relying on local democracy to shape their causes.

A founder of popular news site rabble.ca, Rebick also contributes regularly to Q’s media panel on CBC Radio One. Her newest book, Occupy This!, unravels the Occupy movement and its connections to past social uprisings.

Rallies for the cause

Celebrated environmentalist and author Bill McKibben came to Bishop’s as the final speaker of this year’s Donald Lecture Series. McKibben started 350.org, a worldwide movement of citizens protesting and speaking out against climate change.

Wanting the language on climate change to be universal, McKibben chose the name 350: the number of carbon dioxide emissions in parts per million that the atmosphere can hold as a safe upper limit to prevent detrimental climate change (currently the planet is closer to 392).

McKibben showed how the movement went viral through photos from some 15,000 climate change rallies to date, taken from across 189 participating countries beginning in 2009.

McKibben allowed the pictures to help tell his story, arguably seen as one of the biggest mass movements in the world on environmental issues.

McKibben believes positive change is on its way. He cited the impact of 350.org in mass protests in the U.S. against the Keystone XL oil pipeline from Alberta through to the southern states (McKibben was involved and arrested). He also referenced a current phenomenon borrowed from the anti-apartheid movements of the 1980s: colleges, universities, and large organizations choosing not to invest in oil companies within their mutual funds and endowments as a means of protest that carry significant economic consequences.

Bishop’s placed first at this year’s NIBS competition in Belgium (held at Leuven University College). The final featured BU versus Memorial, after BU bested Carleton in the semi-final and Memorial knocked out UPEI.

Erected when the Johnson building (New Arts) was rebuilt in 1891, the bell in the tower bears the name of “Meneely & Co.” of West Troy NY. When chapel was compulsory, the bell rang twice daily, at 7:30 a.m. for matins and 5:30 p.m. for evensong. Students who preferred sleep to services sometimes stole the clapper. Dr. Ralph Cooke ’53 remembers this prank made the national news in 1952; Principal Jewitt held a student assembly to appeal for the clapper’s return. Insets: a view of the tower from next to St. Mark’s and near the entrance to the Quad, the bell itself, the clapper, an inscription from 1990, and an anonymous painted date from 1957.

Why do over 2000 alumni, parents and friends choose to donate each year to Bishop’s University? Stefanie DeYoung ’09 explains her reasons.

After graduating in Business, Stefanie returned to her home of Halifax where she joined CIBC as a teller and is currently an associate at RBC Dominion Securities. She also became active in the BU Alumni Association. “BU is such a close-knit family, and I really enjoy meeting fellow alumni and hearing about their transition from BU into their careers. We share a common experience and tradition, and it’s fun getting involved in alumni events,” says Stefanie.

“People often express surprise when I tell them I donate regularly to Bishop’s. They assume I’m too young to make this type of financial commitment. But after we talk a bit more, they agree supporting our University is a good idea.”

“I knew I wanted to give back to Bishop’s almost as soon as I graduated. My friends and I incurred student debts, even though we did whatever we could to pay for our education at the time. I had to work at two jobs during the summer plus figure out how to earn money during the academic year. I believe it’s nice to find a way to help current students, since university does cost so much. And I want them to benefit from the same experience I did at BU.”

“When an appeal letter for the Annual Fund arrived in my mailbox, it reminded me I want to give back. Although I’m not yet financially secure—being a young grad in an entry-level job—I wanted to become a donor. I believe every donation can help and also, it just feels right!”

“Lately, I’ve been directing my gifts to the Library, because I am a huge reader and loved spending time in the Library as a student. I like to think my donations help keep Bishop’s on par with other universities. When prospective students explore schools to attend, I want Bishop’s to have sufficient resources to attract them. It’s also reassuring as an alumna to support something students consider important. In 2012 they voted to raise their fees by $50 a year to support the Library. If students can come up with that extra money, I certainly can.”

Thinking of becoming a donor? Stefanie offers this piece of advice to her fellow alumni: “You really should. It’s a great idea. Not just for the tax receipts (though they’re a bonus), but for the opportunity to help your University continue to deliver a first rate education.”
An undebatable success  Bishop’s hosts three universities from the Maritimes for a series of unprecedented events

In February, Bishop’s hosted a series of unprecedented events during Winter Homecoming. In addition to the usual ones—basketball games and a hockey tournament—we added an engaging public academic component called “Up for Debate: The Future of Undergraduate Education.” We invited students, faculty, alumni and administrators from small, residential, liberal education-modeled universities—Acadia, St. Francis Xavier, Mount Allison and Bishop’s—to participate in three events: a student debate tournament, our first ever TEDxBishopsU, and a live taping of CBC’s radio show “The Debaters.”

But let’s go to the beginning. When Dr. Jessica Riddell asked who wanted to help bring TED talks to our campus, I could not have been more excited. An avid watcher of TED talks, I knew this event would be spectacular. And so did the over 100 students who responded to her initial email!

During our first meeting, Dr. Riddell explained the “what” (an amazing tournament, our very own TEDx and the hilarious CBC comedians) and also the “why.” She said many Canadian universities are experiencing a “mission drift” due to cutbacks in funding, debt crises and rising tuition. Several institutions have increased undergraduate enrolment rapidly with a specific focus on the “bottom line,” which has diluted the quality of undergraduate education.

She went on to say Bishop’s has been relatively insulated from this widespread crisis because we’ve grown sustainably and maintained our commitment to the tenets of a liberal education. I left the meeting appreciating that our little university could contribute significantly to the debate about the type of university system that ought to exist in Canada and our weekend would represent a start.

After hundreds of hours of preparation, our weekend arrived. And it couldn’t have been more successful! Conversations were animated at our first dinner and those who were once strangers became quick friends. The student debate tournament on Saturday morning featured two teams of two from each of the four universities; the debaters were eloquent, playful, and articulate. Peter Blaikie ’58 (our gracious host and patron for the weekend) and others presided as judges over the final in St. Mark’s Chapel (spoiler alert: Mount Allison won).

Later we hosted our first ever TEDxBishopsU event: ten speakers—students and professors from the four universities and Scott Griffin ’60, DCL ’02—presented talks of 18 minutes or less on the theme of “Illuminating Education.” Bandeen Hall became fully illuminated by these inspirational and aspirational talks.

In the evening, members of the Bishop’s and Sherbrooke communities, as well as our guests from the Maritimes, joined together in laughter in Centennial Theatre for the taping of three episodes of “The Debaters.”

“Every 'Debaters' taping is fun. But this one, thanks to the amazing atmosphere of Bishop’s University, truly took it up a notch.”

Steve Patterson
Host, CBC Radio One’s “The Debaters”

Everyone walked away from the weekend inspired, invigorated and excited! We set out to explore the complex issues around undergraduate education in a stimulating and thought-provoking environment. We did that and had a ton of fun too! Even though I’m graduating in May, I’ll return for “Up for Debate” Round II: February 7-8, 2014!

The Bishop’s Gaters sports teams completed an up and down winter semester in 2012-13. From the hardwood to the ice there were three Bishop’s teams in action.

- The women’s hockey team struggled in their MIWHL games (0-8-1) but played some quality hockey during exhibition contests (4-7-0).
- The women’s basketball team was young and plagued with injuries throughout their campaign and were unable to win a regular season game.
- The men’s basketball team played some inspired basketball and made a run to the RSEQ championship where they fell to the McGill Redmen. Their run rejuvenated pride in the purple and silver.

Roy Cullen ’65 is a contributing author to a recent publication entitled Governance and Security As A Unitary Concept. This book presents diverse issues affecting the inter-relationship of governance and security, and how these foci influence decision-making in a global context. Governance in modern human affairs determines action or gridlock, wealth or penury, peace or conflict, health or illness, progress or arrested development. Security does not mean just physical security but also human, environmental, economic, resource and cultural security. Roy’s chapter is entitled “Good Governance and a More Secure World—Natural Bedfellows.”

Context Matters: sports and positive youth development

Sports build character. These three words are used consistently when describing the impact of organized sports on youth.

The thought is not new: early philosophers such as Plato argued that “the moral value of exercise and sport far outweigh the physical value.” Such statements reinforce our preconceived belief that sports invariably have positive effects on the psychosocial development of athletes.

However, we may exaggerate the positive effects of sports if we fail to take a critical look at the context to determine if sports build character. (By context, I refer to any situation where sports are played in an organized manner under the supervision of one or many adults.)

In August about 4,200 athletes will converge on Sherbrooke for the 2013 Canada Games. A sporting event of this magnitude offers an opportunity to reflect on the impact of organized sport on the personal development of athletes. A significant amount of research has investigated this field and has aptly been named Positive Youth Development (PYD) through sport.

I became interested in PYD during my graduate work after completing an undergraduate degree in Psychology at Bishop’s. My research focused on identifying characteristics of the sport context that lead to PYD in athletes. Unfortunately past research demonstrates that sport and positive outcomes are not always synonymous.

Sports are associated with a number of positive outcomes and experiences. For example, participants report higher rates of school enjoyment and college attendance compared to youth who do not participate. However, organized sports are also linked with negative outcomes, including higher amounts of alcohol and illegal substance use, decreased moral reasoning, and more risky sexual behaviour.

These findings point to what I refer to as the myth of the ‘magic ball’. Namely, there is nothing magical about placing a group of individuals together and having them play sports. To promote positive outcomes, we must pay attention, among other things, to the context in which youth participate.

Although initial research showed that placing too much emphasis on winning is associated with negative developmental outcomes, more recent research has found that highly competitive contexts can foster PYD. Given the high level of expertise of the athletes attending the Canada Games, it is clear they participate to win. Win or lose, however, positive development can be promoted across all levels of athletic expertise; the context we create dictates how successfully we promote PYD in athletes.

Some of my research identified increased peer interactions among youth, increased effort put into an activity, and increased attention to the athletes’ goals as facilitators of positive experiences. These findings demonstrate that everyone involved—coaches, parents, administrators—must work together to create positive sport contexts.

As the Bishop’s community welcomes athletes to the Canada Games, we must acknowledge our important role in creating contexts that foster PYD in athletes—a role we should not take lightly.

Dany MacDonald ’03
Had a good day.

Picked up my bike at the repair shop. Downloaded some tunes. My MasterCard credit card makes it easy, and helps build my credit history too. I can get emergency cash at ATMs, and even pay over time if I need to. Plus, my school gets a contribution for every purchase. Not bad.
